KNOW THE WEATHER

By E. H. Sims

Should wives wait for the barometer to rise before asking their husbands for that special favor?

There is a valid reason why this question, admitted folklore, is often a good one. It depends on the husband involved, to some degree, but it is generally a safe rule to follow.

A rising barometer makes us all feel better. For the husband with corns, bunions, old wounds or creaky bones, a low barometer affects his comfort and nerves. A drop of barometric pressure affects one mentally, and also one's nerves, by causing dehydration of the tissues of the body.

Thus, a high barometer means he will probably be feeling his best —other things being equal — and that's the time, girls, to break down his resistance!

Devotional Reading: Ephesians 5:10-17.

Courage in Crisis

Lesson for July 26, 1959

ONE BOOK in our Bible never mentions the name of God: the book of Esther. Indeed there is no reference to religion of any kind. Nothing said here about prayer, faith in God, repentance, immortality, sacrifice, public worship. Nothing about God at all. For this reason, from early Christian times there have been those who have said that the book of Esther has no place even in the Hebrew Bible, let alone the Christian. But the church has kept this strange book, shockingly different as it is from the rest of the Bible. Why is this?

Dr. Foreman

A Head Held High

The reason is to be found not only in the fact that this book has an intricate and fascinating plot, not simple like Ruth but complicated, with a kind of barbaric dash about it. A tale that begins with a drinking party and ends with a massacre, is not "milk for babes." This however is not the main reason, one suspects, why the story has been preserved. It is rather that Esther brings out dramatically some valuable points about religion that is not expressed in words (prayers, liturgies) but in action.

Look at this one theme: "Courage in Crisis." (If the reader of this column has not read the book of Esther lately, I should do so before reading on.) The reader will think of Queen Esthers courage at once: but who put the notion into her head? It was her cousin and former guardian Mordecai. Now it is easy to tell some one else to be brave—"Let's you and him fight!" —but Mordecai was not that sort of person. He had a kind of courage himself. Refusing as he did to bow down to Haman was a risky thing to do. He could easily get his own head taken off for it. But Mordecai had a proper sense of his personal dignity.

The Timing of Destiny

If the rest of the family were like Mordecai and Esther, whatever religion they had they did not talk about it. It would have sounded pious for Mordecai to have said, "I fear God only, therefore I will not kiss the dust before this man Haman." But he didn't say that. It would have sounded pious, too, if he had told his young cousin, "God has brought you to the hour of destiny." But he didn't say that either. What he did say was, "Who knows whether you have not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" He did not profess to know everything. He would not say flatly that this was the reason why Esther was queen. "Who knows—?" he said. It might be a mistake to approach the king—a fatal mistake. It was a risk—but worth taking. There is something very fine here. Courage is always a matter of risk. Courage based on a sure thing is not courage. Furthermore, while (as always) Mordecai did not talk about God, the reader has the feeling that he must have believed. The Queen and the Occasion: Mordecai just felt that they matched too well to be an accident. But who matched them? Any one who believes in destiny has a choice: either an impersonal deity, a machine, a blind fate, or else a wise and powerful God. The timing of destiny is either an unexplainable happen-so, or else it comes from the planning of God.

Courage in Crisis

So the lovely young Queen took over from her wise old cousin. She took her life in her hands for the sake of her people's lives. There is a great deal more to be said, but the reader will think of it, about Esther's courage. One act of bravery did not settle the matter. There had to be planning and scheming after that. Mere courage, without brains, is not enough. That is why men have exterminated tigers and tigers have not exterminated men. But the thing to remember is: Why was Esther brave in the moment that called for bravery? It was not that she was hypnotized or bullied into courage by Mordecai: not that she was a daredevil. She found the courage because she knew that on it, on her, many lives depended.
